ORIGINS

Seen from above and already recorded in the Napoleonic cadastral registers, reveals a singular shape: that of a hat.

Only when observed from a distance does an attentive eye recognize the outline of a chapotte. The name then asserts itself, recorded by the imperial administration, almost as a graphic certainty.

The reference to Napoleon Bonaparte's bicorne emerges from this visual analogy—not from intention, but from intuition. It therefore seemed natural to draw upon Napoleon's famous handwriting as inspiration for the typography, which today forms the label.
